

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

My name is Dan Crutcher and I am writing to you regarding the proposal to drop the requirement that telephone companies be required to provide ISPs access to their networks.

I currently have DSL access at my business from the local telephone company only because when I was searching for fast Internet access that was the only option available in my city. I fear that the lack of competition that would result from not requiring the telephone company to provide DSL network access to other ISPs would drive up prices and leave my company with fewer options in the future.

I urge you not to take any action that will make it more difficult for local ISPs to provide competitive Internet access services.

Sincerely,

Sincerely,

Dan Crutcher
